

and rent-sweating, nobody raises a voice against his selfish inhumanity. When before a few thousands per annum out of his yearly millions, and advertises well the fact that he intends to devote this paltry sum to the better housing of the poor—whose fathers and grandfathers have rotted to death—whose children have faded away, on his estate—the press of the civilized world, joined in one monumental grovel, applauds his Grace's "charity," wallows in the dirt at his Grace's boots. For weeks then, afterwards, are we treated by the capitalistic press to slobbering leaders on the "responsibilities of wealth."

We do not recognise the responsibility of wealth! Wealth has no responsibilities, because it has no rights—no rights, we mean, that are not purely conventional and arbitrary rights which are not the outgrowth of miserable circumstance and paltry expediency. In a broader right, the splendid responsibility of his brother's welfare. The wealthy may have all they can grab. They may be conscience-stricken and relax their grasp upon a fraction, if they choose. It matters little. We recognise only the fact that every man has a right to the full realization of all his mental and physical potentialities. The speculative enterprise of the Smiths and the Pullmans, of the Guinnesses and the Carnegies, interfere with this right. It signifies little that a man becomes very good at being as bad as he wished to be, when he is to attain a special end, and the end turns out when no longer his senses minister to his animal gratification. It is very fine to be open-handed within limits, after being, for one's life-time, close-fisted without limits. But let it pass! The rich are entitled to all they can get, if they are entitled—from the standpoint of abstract reason—to get anything beyond what another gets. We must be logical. Socialism says no man has a right which is another man's wrong. It is possible that Socialism is on the more rational track.

Tolstoy, in his "Two Brothers and Gold," tells a story of two men devoted to the service of humanity. One day they found a treasure of gold. One brother fled from it as from a temptation of the Devil. The other gathered it up, went into a city with it, built infirmaries, hospitals, charitable institutions. Men called this brother good, holy, noble, what-not; he rubbed himself down with their praise as a South Sea Islander rubs himself down with coconut-oil. Then he began to desire his brother's company. He went into the field to look for him, thinking: "My brother reasoned wrong when he jumped away from the gold and fled. Haven't I done better? An angel later, he tells me that he is unworthy to live with so good a brother. 'Thy brother's leap is worth more than all those things that thou hast done with thy gold.' The man explains all about the poor, the wanderers, the orphans he has succored; but the angel comes down on him, like a blackbird on a worm, with: 'The Devil, who put down the gold to seduce thee, also taught thee these words.' This little fable pretty accurately describes the position of a man—lauded by a silly, drivelling newspaper press—who, after submitting without a complaint to the iniquitous existing condition of things, endeavours to make peace with his conscience by donating a portion of his fearful superfluity to the service of his race. The modern advertiser, however, does not do this. He merely buys a reputation for benevolence, and he gets it under the false pretence of being genuinely charitable; but very likely, the beautiful theory of compensation comes in here, and the purchased reputation is about as false as the benevolence with which he bought it.—Sydney Bulletin.

ORIGINAL GILBERT.

THE "BAB BALLADS" AS THE SOURCE OF "PINAFORE," "PATIENCE" AND COMPANY.

At the time of "Pinafore's" production it was intimated by certain curious investigators that the germ of the libretto was to be found in one of W. S. Gilbert's early pieces of nonsense verse entitled "Captain Reece." This libretto was the first of the "Bab Ballads" published in the alleged and defunct comic paper Punch, sometimes run as an opposition weekly to Punch, under the editorship of the late Thomas Hood. The younger Gilbert never successfully denied the assertion—it could scarcely be called a charge—and the recent publication of a revised volume of these same ballads shows that "Captain Reece" was not the only verse of his youth from which Gilbert gathered inspiration for his later work.

An inspection of the volume shows a curious want of originality in Gilbert, or rather it shows that his fun was of a very circumscribed order, and that his whimsicality runs in one direction only. The reader has only to review the stories and characters which Sir Arthur Sullivan has made so mutually popular to appreciate the justice of this criticism. The Admiral in "Pinafore," the Judge in "Trial by Jury," the Colonel in "Patience," the Lord Chancellor, and the Mikado himself are all the same character under different names; all have the same autobiographical patter songs to sing; Lady Jane and Katharine are first cousins; the bumboat woman in "Pinafore" and the housekeeper of the "Pirates" are fashioned on the same lines; Ralph Rackstraw is Frederick under another service, and the daughter of the Major-General are all the sisters and the cousins and the aunts of the Admiral.

In the ballad referred to Captain Reece is in command of her Britannic Majesty's ship the Mantelpiece, and his chief aim in life was "to promote the comfort of his crew." One day the good Captain, thinking that something might still be done to make his sailors happy and comfortable, inquired of the boatswain, William Lee, if this were so. The spokesman, "William Lee," a nervous, shy, awkward man, cleared his throat and made reply:

"You have a daughter, Captain Reece, Ten female cousins and a niece, A me, I what I'm told is true, Six sisters and an aunt or two."

Here is the female chorus of "Pinafore" provided for, and William Lee's idea is that all these charming relatives of the Captain should be united to unmarried members of the crew. The Captain immediately consented to such an admirable arrangement, and declared that he would in addition settle thousands on all the contracting parties, and then remain a bachelor. To this, however, Boatswain Lee blushing objected, and offered as a sacrifice his widowed mother, who, it seems, had long worshipped Captain Reece from afar. And so they were all married.

casting him into the black hole among the cockroaches. Here, undoubtedly the first Ralph Rackstraw. The relations are somewhat altered, it is true, but there is no doubt of the "Pinafore" flavor of the whole. But there is more to follow. Farther on we come across "The Bumboat Woman's Story." This is told in the first person, and in telling it she looks back "many years ago when she was young and charming," when her "cheeks were mellow and soft, and her eyes were large and when sweet Poli Pinaapple's eyes were the standing toast of the Royal Fleet." Of all the kind commands that anchored in Portsmouth bay the sweetest and kindest of all, according to Poli Pinaapple, was Lieutenant Belage of the Hot Cross Bun, and whenever the bumboat woman went on board the Hot Cross Bun, what should Lieutenant Belage call her but "Little Buttercup?"

It is to be remarked, too, that the Hot Cross Bun was a very proper gunboat. The strongest oar ever heard on board was "Dear me," and no one ever thought of ripping out a "big, big oar."

The plot in "Pinafore" turns upon the changing of the Captain and Ralph when they were children, and there are two forebodings of that in the "Bab Ballads." The first is found entitled "General John":

General John was a soldier tried, A chief of warlike dons; A haughty aide and a withering pride, Were Major-General John's.

Full-Private James described might be As a man of mournful mind; No characteristic trait had he Of any distinctive kind.

Notwithstanding Private James' colorless character, he was not without his thoughts, and one of these he one day submitted to General John. It was that they two had been "cruelly changed at birth." He proceeds:

"I've a strange idea, each other's names That we have each got on; Such things have been," said Private James; "They have!" answered General John.

Notwithstanding his sneer, General John was a just man, and, being convinced that Private James was honest in his opinion, he immediately accepted the situation, shouldered his musket, and obeyed orders like a dutiful soldier. The other indication is found in the poem entitled "The Baby's Vengeance." Paley Voltaire of Bromptonville was weary at heart and extremely ill. There was fever in his blood and an unrest in his heart. He demanded one Frederick West, a dastard, to whom he wished to make confession. Frederick came, and to him he confided the fact that when they were both babies they were put out wet-nursing to the same woman, and that, being jealous of the attention young West was receiving, he crawled out of his cradle and changed places with the favored infant. Altogether, and though in many pieces a patchwork, "Pinafore" can be very easily made out of the "Bab" effusions.

Others of his libretti are "The Rival Curates" and it tells a story that is simply that of the rival poets in "Patience." Mr. Clayton Hooper had the cure of souls at Spiffon-extra-Looper, and he was the mildest curate that ever breathed.

A visitor chanced to come to Spiffon-extra-Looper one day and peeped at the idea that the Rev. Hooper was the mildest curate going. He contended that for blank benignity he was not a patch upon the Rev. Hopple Porter, the curate of Assesmill-cum-Worter.

He plays the silly flute, And looks depressed and blighted, Doves round about him "poor!" And lambskins dance delighted. He labors more than you At wretched work and frames it; In olden days, he stuck his sword—yes, and names it.

Upon hearing this Mr. Hooper sent two desperadoes to Hopple Porter with instructions to assassinate him unless he agreed to play croquet, smoke, and dance. Porter accepted the situation with joy.

"What?" said that reverend gent. "Dare I though I'm a curate? Smoke? I baste myself with scum! Play croquet? Oh, with pleasure. For years I've longed for none Excuse for my inaction; Now that excuse has come, I do it on compulsion."

There are a number of other coincidences that the interested reader may work out for himself. Of course there is nothing approaching plagiarism in all this. A man has a perfect right to work over his own game, but it only shows how extremely saving of his inventive abilities Mr. Gilbert has been.—S. F. Chronicle.

VAGARIES OF MEMORY.

CURIOUS RESULTS OF CERTAIN DISEASES OF THE BRAIN.

When disease affects the brain the alterations of word memory are something very strange, says a writer in the Century for March. In the most complete form of this so-called aphasia the person cannot understand words, he cannot think in words and cannot talk words. Usually, however, words are remembered sufficiently to be recognized when heard or seen, but although the idea is there, the person cannot speak in words. I recall the case of an old German woman who had aphasia. When asked how old she was she would indicate 60 with her fingers. If asked how many children she had she would indicate seven. If two of the fingers were turned down she would get angry and insist upon the seven. She was able to understand questions. She knew what the figure meant, but had not the power to say the word "seven." It is a very curious fact that in these forms of aphasia the language of the emotions may be preserved while the language of the intellect is destroyed. Very often a profane man, when he has aphasia, is able to swear. This German woman, when excited, could say "Gott in Himmel!" Besides this there was left to her but one little fragment of each of the two languages which she had known. She could not say the English "no," but could say the German "nein," and she could not say the English "yes," but could splutter out the English "yes."

The forms of aphasia known as word blindness and word deafness are very strange. The sufferer from word blindness can write and will understand what is said to him; he will talk to you and perhaps talk you to death; but hand him a book, a newspaper, or even the letter he himself has written, and he cannot read a word. Thus an active man of business having written a letter, giving directions for an important matter, attempted to read it in order to see if it was correct, but was astounded to find that he could not make out a single word. He had been suddenly stricken with word blindness. The sounds of the words and the words themselves had remained to him, but the recollection of the written forms of the words was gone. In a case of word deafness the person can talk and write, but although his hearing is perfect he cannot recognize the spoken words. The sound of the voice is plain to his sense, but conveys no thought to him. The records of the past—the unconscious memory, so to speak—exist in the brain but for conscious recognition these must be dragged out before the conscious mind. It is doubtful whether there is such a thing as a bad memory, for, as a badly kept brain record,

The difference in individuals as to the power of recollecting probably consists in the relation between consciousness and memory. One man has the power of going into the library in his brain and picking up at once the leaf he wants, and glories in his good memory. Another cannot in a moment find what he desires, but when the floods of disease come, then spontaneously float up those things which he had thought were gone forever.
